Un-, prefix¹, expressing negation, representing OE. un-, = OFris. un-, on-, oen- (WFRIS. an-, on-, EFris. an-, NFris. ün-), MDu. (and Dn.) on-, OS. (MLG., LG.), OHG. (MLG., G.) and Goth. un-, ON. ú-, ö- (Icel. ó-, Sw. o-, Norw. and Da. u-), corresponding to OIr. in-, an-, L. in- (in-, il-, ir-, i-), Gr. án-, á-, Arm. an-, Skt. an-, a-, Indo-Eur. h₁*, an ablaut-variant of ne not: see NE adv. The prefix has been very extensively employed in English, as in the other Germanic languages, and is now the one which can be used with the greatest freedom in new formations.

2. In OE. the number of recorded forms in un- is very large, the prefix being freely applied with a purely negative force to several parts of speech, which may be classified as follows: (a) simple adjectives, as unbeald, unblide, unbráð, uncléne, unclif, undop, etc., derivative adjs., as unbealful, unblóðig, ungyhtig, unmeahtig, unclénlic, uncildic, uncynlic, etc., and composite forms, as uncampróf, un- clotpancol, unfastréð, etc.; (b) simple adverbs, as uncláde, unefic, unfegere, unfeorr, etc., and derivative forms, as unclénlic, uncildlic, uncláðelic, unfestlic, etc.; (c) past participles of strong and weak verbs, as unbeden, unbegunnen, unboren, undrisen, ungeboden, ungecunden, etc., unbyrged, undéled, ungeðered, unclénsod, ungecendod, ungehdáðod, unboht, etc.; (d) present participles, as unberende, unbirnende, uncwaciende, uncwéðende, unflénde, etc.; (e) simple nouns, as unár, unbealu, uncest, unfrið, unlagu, unþanc, etc., and derivative forms, as unclénness, unfegernes, uncláðscipe, unwáðsdom, etc. A prominent feature of the OE. examples is the prevalence of long derivative or compound formations, usually based upon, or corresponding to, Latin formations with in-, im-, il-, as unaberendlic intolerable, unaberendlic intolerably, unbegriþendlic incomprehensible, unbescláðodlic inconsiderately, unforhæfedness incontinence. The greater number of such forms were no doubt artificial, and had little or no currency in ordinary language. In a small number of nouns un- appears with a pejorative in place of a negative sense, as unwæt excessive eating, uncodun an evil disease, uncræft an evil art, and similarly undéð, undóm, unlagu, unræð, unsið, untima, unweder. Altogether the number of un- words recorded in OE. is about 1250, of which barely an eighth part survived beyond the OE. period.

3. The disappearance of so many of the OE. formations left early ME. with a very limited supply of un- words, even when new (or apparently new) examples are added to those inherited from the older language. A fair proportion even of this reduced stock proved unable to survive for more than half a century, and had passed out of use by 1250. A few of these, especially such as obviously had some general currency, are entered in their alphabetical places, but the greater number are given here (together with a few of somewhat later date) as properly belonging to the older period and having no direct influence upon the later development of the prefix. Most of these are composed of purely native elements, but a few show the beginnings of Scandinavian and French influence, as ungrith, unhæzerliç, unskatheful; unbispued, uncoverlich.

In ME. transcripts of OE. homilies a few additional words are found, as unafillendlic, unasegliche, uniredliche, unisewenlich, untodele(n)dlic, unzearu.

4. When the words included in the previous section are eliminated, the early ME. instances of the prefix resolve themselves into the following classes: (a) survivals of OE. forms, chiefly adjectives, as unclene, unecouth, unfele, unferre, unholle, unmilde, unorne, unsely, and nouns, as unhele, unlage, unmizt, unrede, unriht, unsele, unthank, unclenenes, unwisdom, and a few past participles, as unbegun, unborn, unbozt, unheled, unwemmed, unwounded; (b) new formations from native elements, as unbrusom, uncomely, unhende, unsker, untidy adjs., unhope, unstrength, unwinne sbs., unbeten, undone, unshriven, undemed, unsoupt pa. pples.; (c) adoptions of Scandinavian forms, or new formations on Scandinavian bases, as unmeek, unmail, unsauzt, unseize adjs.; unhap, unsauzt, unskill sbs., unbigged pa. pple.; (d) new formations on French bases, as ungracious, unsavoury, untrussed.

Down to 1300 these additions were comparatively few, and barely compensated for the disuse of obsolescent forms. About that date a southern writer like Robert of Gloucestre uses only a small number of un- words, and most of these belong to the traditional stock. On the other hand, the northern Cursor Mundi has a rich variety of both old and new forms, and indicates clearly the beginning of a fresh period of development. The features which are most notable in this are: (a) the increased proportion of past pples. in comparison with adjs. and nouns; (b) the reappearance of pres. pples. (as undeiaid, unseland, unseand), which are wanting in earlier ME. texts; (c) the increase in the French element, as uncertain, undevote, undispensed, unselun, unfruitand, unlele, unleule, unmesure, unpays, unponist, unpurvoid, unquit, unresun, unresunable, unvised, unwily. With this revival of the past and pres. pples., and the introduction of -able, the way was opened for some of the commonest uses of un- in the later language. The tendency thus indicated is clearly marked before the middle of the 14th century; Dan Michel uses pres. pples., as onconnynde, on-spekynde, onwytynde, while Hampole has unconable, uncurable, unufferable, and even unfillable, unstrirable. Before 1400 the period of free employment of the prefix had fully begun, as shown by the number of new formations appearing in the works of Chaucer, Wyclif, Trevisa, and others.

b. As in OE., the usual force of un- in ME. is purely negative. The pejorative sense however survived in a few words, as unrede, unsihte, unthrew, unwether, unwine, unwrench, and appears also in unlede, unlude, unthede, unwiht; in unbeast it is employed with a French base.

c. The usual form of the prefix in ME. is un-, but on- appears in some English texts (as the later version of Layamon, the Ayebite, and the Prompt. Parv.), and is common in older Scottish, esp. in the 16th century; this form is still current in midland and south-western dialects and in Scotland. In Sir Ferunbras (c 1380) the form oun- is employed, and a pronunciation corresponding to this (un-) is still heard in Aberdeenshire. In detached use (see 5 d) the form (on-), sometimes written ohn, is also employed in the same locality.

5. Some peculiarities in the use of un-, arising in the ME. period but surviving beyond it, require special notice.

a. It is sometimes redundantly prefixed to adjs. ending in -less. Early instances are unrecheless reckless, unroless restless, unwittles insensible (see 3 above), and unigittles guiltless (Sir Tristr. 2144). The type, however, chiefly belongs to the later 16th and the 17th cent.; among the instances from that period are unboundless, uncomfortless, undauntless, uneffectless, unfathomless, unhelpless, unmatchless, unmerciless, unnumberless, unrecomptless, unremorseless, unrespectless, unshameless, unshapeless, untimeless; as late as 1786 unquestionless is found, and unrestless exists in modern dialect.

b. From the 14th century onwards there was considerable variation, when the base was of Latin origin, between the Latin in-, im-, etc., and the native un-. Early examples of forms with un-, which either then or a little later have variants with in-, im-, are unability, uncorrigible, uncorrupt, uncurable, undign, undiscreet, unmeasurable, unmovable, unnumerable, unperfect, unperfection, unportable, unpossible. Similar formations continued to multiply during the following centuries, so that a large proportion of the words beginning with il-, im-, in-, ir- had corresponding forms in un-, as inadequate, inadvertence, inarticulate, unartificial, unattentive, unaudible, unauspicious, uncapable, etc. The culminating period of the double forms lies in the 17th century; since that time the tendency has been to differentiate, and to discard one or other of the doublets, the forms with in-, etc., being very commonly preferred when the whole word has a distinctively Latin character, as inadequate, inadvertence, inarticulate, etc. Even with such forms there is no absolute rule, and doublets are still numerous, as in- or unadvisable, in- or unalienable, etc. (See IN-.)

By inadvertence, or simple errors in printing, un- or un- sometimes appears in works of the 16-17th cent. for in-, im-, or em-, en-, as unencouraged for in-, unlarge for en-, unemployed for in-, unpoisoning for in-, unflamed for in-, unpostumed for in-.

c. When two or more negative terms occurred in the same clause and were coupled by and or or, the prefix was sometimes employed only with the first. The following are examples of this practice, which is especially common in Scottish of the 16th century.

c 1380 WYCLIF Wks. (1880) 129 To kepe hym self vuhlekid or defauld fro his world. c 1460 J. RUSSELL Bk. Nurture 944 Lett neuer wollyn cloth.. passe a seuenyght to be vnbrossen & shakyn. a 1500 in Katis Raving 3 The synls that he has done vncomfessyt of or repentyt. 1506 in Charters, &c., Edinb. (1871) 189 Throw selling of clayth.. vnscow or customt be yow. 1565 Rec. Earld. Orkney 274 Uncockit, compellit, or seduct be ony way. 1603 KNOLLES Hist. Turks (1621) 83 The insolent soldiery.. nothing dedicated to the seruice of God, left vnpolluted and defaced. 1611. Id. Which companies.. came neere vnto the towne vnseene or discouered. 1707 MONTIMER Hush. 608 Eggs, unbroken or crack'd.

d. When un- is prefixed to present or past participles, these are rarely employed in a true participial function, but become adjectival in character. Examples of the present participle, however, occasionally occur with a following object, or with a prepositional construction; and in Scottish use, from at least the 15th century, un- in such cases has acquired the sense of 'without'. More rarely, in the older language, it has the same sense with passive participles. Both constructions are still retained in north-eastern Scottish dialect, with the prefix in the form on or ohn, frequently written separate from the participle. (The spelling ohn is due to, or has led to, a false association with G. ohne without.) Examples of these uses are:—

(a) 1456 SIR G. HAVE Law Arms (S.T.S.) 155 All that I may gett apou him, unsland him. Ibid. 163 How may than a man do till othir sik dissait, ungreuand God? 1573 *Reg. 6. During the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries the use of un- steadily increased, a large number of words being thus formed which have permanently established themselves in the language, besides many more which occur only incidentally or rarely. The freedom with which the prefix could be used in new formations appears clearly in the dictionaries of Florio and Cotgrave, who constantly employ it in rendering Italian and French negative terms in in-, etc. As the use of un- or in- (see 5 b) was still largely a matter of choice, and many of the older formations were still current, the vocabulary of the 17th century exhibits many types in common use which are now rare or obsolete, and in general is extremely rich in words beginning with un-. During the 18th century many of the older forms disappeared, and new formations became more limited in number and variety, but the sense of freedom in the use of the prefix when desired is clearly shown by a large number of the examples given by Ash in his dictionary in 1775. These were obviously manufactured for the purpose, and when added to the genuine words which he has included, make up a total of about 5,000 entries. In this way Ash frequently anticipates the actual introduction of new formations. In the 19th century the use of the prefix became still more common, it being freely applied to almost any adjectival or participial form, until its employment has become almost unrestricted, within certain limits indicated below. On this account it is impossible to make a complete enumeration even of forms which have actually been used, still less of those which may be created at any time.

b. The form of the prefix indicates that it was originally unstressed (although in OE. poetry it may have stress and carry the alliterative letter), and normally it still bears this relationship to the main part of the word. There is, however, considerable tendency to give stress to it in rare or casual formations, and whenever the negation or contrast which it implies is at all emphatic. In such cases the compound may either have two equal stresses, or the prefix may have the stronger stress; the latter degree of emphasis is usually indicated by underlining or italicizing, and the use of the hyphen; e.g. 'he is distinctly un-literary'.

c. The following sections illustrate the usual types of current formations, with illustrations drawn from unimportant modern examples, which might be indefinitely increased. All older examples in actual use, and all words important either in themselves or on account of their source, are given in their alphabetical place in the main series. As a large number of these are purely negative and self-explanatory, the place of a definition is supplied by a reference to the section of this article under which the precise type of formation is explained and illustrated.

The entries in Ash (see above) have been regarded as worthy of note only when they anticipate the appearance of a word in actual use. In these cases a reference to Ash is given within parentheses.

A purely artificial formation (suggested by Euphuistic diction) is un-to-be-imitated (Scott Monast. xx).

7. Un- is freely prefixed to adjectives of all kinds, except where a Latin form in in-, etc., has definitely established itself in common use. Both forms, however, may co-exist, and in some cases a new formation with un- has been introduced when that with in- has acquired a connotation which it is desirable to avoid. The form with un- is then purely negative, while the other may have almost a positive sense, e.g. un-moral in contrast with immoral. (When the form with un- has similarly acquired a positive implication, the simple negative or neutral sense is expressed by the use of Non- or Not-.) There is also considerable restriction in the use of un- with short simple adjectives of native origin, the negative of these being naturally supplied by another simple word of an opposite signification. There is thus little or no tendency now to employ such forms as unbroad, undeep, unwide, unbold, unglad, ungood, unstrong, unwhole, unfew, etc., which freely occur in the older language. On the other hand, derivative forms in -al, -ant, -ar, -ary, -ent, -ful, -ic, -ical, -ile, -ish, -ive, -ly, -ory, -ous, -y, etc., are too numerous to be completely recorded. The general character of the less usual or permanent of these and other adjectival forms is illustrated by the following examples, which are restricted to such as are recorded before 1890, and could be indefinitely increased by the addition of later or less noteworthy material.

In dictionaries of various dates many formations are given of which no real instance has been found. LEVINS (1570) has unhateful, unprecious. Florio (1598 and 1611) renders equivalent Italian words in in- by such forms as unavailful, unbitttle, uncontinual, uncoy, unempty, unfrail, unnice, unoffensible, unopen, unplenteous, unstrill, unvalorous. Ash (1775) gives unalphabetical, unallendant, unchoicest, uncompartible, uncompressible, uncompulsive, etc. (about 80 in all). Later dictionaries (Webster, Worcester, etc.), with or without indication of source, have the entries unabundant, unbiographical, uncoigent, uncollectible, unconceptive, undeliberative, etc.

b. The use of un- with adjs. in -able, beginning in the 14th cent. (see 4 above), soon became common, and gave rise to a large number of formations in the 16th and subsequent centuries. In the modern period the examples become too numerous for illustration; in addition to those entered as main words, those given below (all earlier than 1890) will serve as specimens of the freedom with which new formations are created. These are sometimes due to an antithesis of the form 'not only... but', as 'not only unpainted but unpaintable'. The unusual types uncome-at-able (1694-), unget-at-able (1862-) are later in date than the corresponding positive terms; for illustrations of similar forms see (b).

Cotgrave (1611) has unboardable, unaccompanable, unaccessable, uncongruible, undisplayable, unendable, unexceedable, unexpressable, undeterminable, etc. Florio (1611) has unaccommodable, uncolourable, uncompassionable, unconquerable, untrafficable, unwoundable, and Hexham (1648) unbestadable, unbindable, unlabourable. Ash (1775) introduces about twenty-five new forms, as unadmittable, unapproachable, uncreditable, unexchangeable, unextinguishable. An extreme instance is unin-one-breath-utterable (B. Jonson Ev. Man in Hum. L. v.).

c. The use of un- with adjectives in -like is found from at least the close of the 16th cent., when ungentlemanlike appears. Others occur in the following century, as unbodylike, ungodlike, unwarlike. The free use of such forms, however, is characteristic of the 19th cent., and especially of the latter part of it. The following are examples of casual formations earlier than 1890.

8. The prefixing of un- to past participles, common in OE. and revived in ME., was subsequently extended until it became the commonest of all uses of the prefix. The following varieties may be distinguished in the usual formations:

a. Simple past pples. in -ed. These form an inexhaustible class, largely represented among the main words, and including many more similar to those in the following list.

A few casual forms are employed by Florio (1611), as uncompacted, unnoted, and various others by Hexham (1648), as unbalsamed, unbedabbled, unbled, unclumilated, uncheated, etc. Ash (1775) carries this type of formation to great lengths, and enters about 800 words which are either not recorded, or are of rare occurrence, in actual use, as unabellied, unaccited, unacquitted, unadjudged, unallured, unamplified, unapraised, etc.

As subdivisions of this type, forms in -ated and -ised may be specially noted on account of their frequency. These are also largely represented in Ash's dictionary, which contains about 150 unused or rare forms in -ated, as unaccumulated, unaccomphorated, uncircumstantiated, etc., and a score or so in -ised, as unapostrophized, unaromatized, uncantonized, etc.

On the double meaning of forms like undressed, unhoused, unseathed, etc., see UN-8.

b. Past pples. with other endings, from stronger or weak verbs. These form a much smaller class, but include a considerable number in common use, as unbegun, unblown, unborn, unbought, etc. A few are found with -ate for -ated, as unvaporate, -exaggerate, but these and others not permanently established in the language are of rare occurrence. Examples in Ash are unbset, uncast, uninterwoven, unshotten, unshown, unshung, etc.

c. Participial formations with un- frequently have a suffixed adverb or preposition (usually with a hyphen when the formation is used attributively). An early example of this is unborne-away (Caxton, 1483); others make their appearance in the 16th and 17th centuries, as uncalled-for, uncared-for, unheard-of, unlooked-for, unthought-of, etc. A number of these have become permanent and are in general use; the following are examples of more casual formations. 1884 H. SPENCER in Contemp. Mag. 613 Exceptional communities unaggressive and from special causes *unaggressed upon. 1868 FROUDE Hist. Reb. xvi. § 17 After he had lived some years in Paris *untaken notice of, indeed unknown.

d. A type of formation which is not very frequent is that in which the participle is preceded by a noun, usually with instrumental sense, as in the following examples.

1595 Polimantia (1881) 36 For not...aged censoring Cato might challenge greater privilege of truth, than your free tongue and *vn-aw-bound skill. 1795 (E. THOMPSON) Meretricious 26 She never vended goods *unduty paid. 1829 BENTHAM Justice & Cod. Petit. 104 Because by the judges, *unfeced as they would be, nothing would be to be got by it. 1895 L. 9. Adjectival forms in -ed, from substantives, of the type unbearded, unbodied, unfeathered, etc.

These are anticipated in OE. by such rare formations as ungefethered, ungezwinnet, unwoded, but otherwise belong to the 16th and subsequent centuries. The usual sense is 'not provided or furnished with', but sometimes 'not affected by', 'not treated with', etc.; in the latter case the use is not clearly distinguishable from the purely participial.

Ash gives such instances as unaproned, unbroched, unbuskined, uncheverned, unclinted, uncodded, etc. 1881 J. M. BROWN Student Life 13 The *unancestored genius. 1873 Daily News 22 Aug. 10. The use of un- with present participles, revived about 1300 (see 4 above), subsequently became common, and has given rise to a large number of permanent words, such as unbecoming, unbending, unchanging, undoubting, etc. (On the participial use of such forms see 5 d.) Examples of casual formations are given below.

Others occurring in Ash's dictionary are unbeguiling, unbiasing, unblinding, unbuilding, unclinting, unflowing, etc.

11. In OE. adverbial formations in -lice formed a large portion of the words in un-. Very few of these survived in ME., but additions were gradually made which maintained the existence of the type (ending in -liche in southern dialects and -ly in the northern). Subsequently the use of un- with -ly again became common, independent of the form of the central element, which may be an adjective, present or past pple., etc. There are however two ways in which such formations may arise. Either the suffix -ly is added to a form already beginning with un-, or un- is prefixed to an adverb already formed with -ly. In most cases the difference in sense is slight or immaterial, but at times the distinction becomes important. If unprofessionally is formed from unprofessional it means 'at variance with, contrary to, professional rules or etiquette', if from professionally it means 'not in a professional manner or capacity'.

The following are miscellaneous examples of recent formations.

A few others occur in early dictionaries, as unaccessively, unavailably, unfalsely, unrecoverably. 1887 H. S. b. Un- is seldom prefixed to simple adverbs. Even in OE. such formations are rare, though a few do occur, as unade, unefne, unfagere, unfeorr, unseldan, unsöfte. ME. retained most of these, but the number has at no time been greatly added to, and the later tendency is to discard such forms altogether.

12. The OE. use of un- with substantives (see 2 c above) survived very fully in ME., not only by the retention of old forms but by the introduction of many new, which continue to multiply in the later periods of the language. From the beginning the nouns have been almost entirely restricted to those of an abstract nature, so that forms with suffixes are numerous. In OE. and ME. the commonest of these is -ness (occasionally -dom and -ship); subsequently -ation, -ity, and -ment are frequent, as in the following selection of miscellaneous examples.

Florio (1611) has a certain number of casual formations, as unacknowledgement, unartiness, unbrilliance, undwellingness, uneloquence, unfrailness, etc. Ash gives unadequateness, uncommensurability, ableness, unfrugality, unliableness, unorganciness, and various others.

b. The prefixing of un- to nouns used attributively is rare and usually not intended seriously.

Other examples are uncurrency-style (1852), undining-room (1845), unhousehold-name (1894), unsociety-people (1898).

13. In OE. there are a few instances of un- with verbal substantives in -ung, as unbletsung, -brosnung, unmelung, etc. None of these survive in ME., and new forms in -ing are rare; untiming occurs c. 1250, uncunning c. 1300, unknowing, unpunishing c. 1340. In the later language the usage also remains rare, and in nearly all verbal sbs. the prefix un- is UN-2; a few exceptions are recorded here.

14. In OE. the use of un- with verbs is limited to formations from negative adjectives, as undclensian, unbrötsian, untrumian from undclene, unbröt, untrum. (More commonly ge- is prefixed, as in geundclensian, geuntrumian, etc.) This type barely survived in ME., but un- began to be sparingly prefixed to ordinary verbs, as untrowen (a 1200) to disbelieve, untruften (a 1225) to distrust, unbetide not to happen, unbe not to be, and similar formations are fairly common in the 16-17th c., as unbecome, unbesit, unbelieve, unbescem, U5 uncomprehend, unconcern, etc. Many of these are obviously suggested by the participial adjectives (unbecoming, etc.), which are quite regular in formation (see 10 above). The type is now rare, but occasional examples occur.

15. By confusion of thought, un- is sometimes used redundantly, especially in the 16th and 17th centuries, where a positive term is really intended. For examples see undated (1637), indifference (1654), undifference (1583).

Un-, prefix 2, expressing reversal or deprivation, representing OE. un-, on-, = OFris. und-, unt-, un-, ond-, ont-, on-, MDu. and Du. ont-, OS. ant-, OHG. ant-, int-, (MHG. and G. ent-), Goth. ana-, originally identical with AND-prefix.

2. From OE. more than a score of reversible verbs formed with un- (or its variant on-) are recorded, as unbindan, uncnýttan, undōn, unfealdan, ungyrdan, unhelian, unlūcan, etc. Some of these were in common use; others occur rarely or in single instances. About half of the number (including all those mentioned above) survived in ME., and various new formations appear in texts from the first half of the 13th century, as unbenden, undýtten, unfast(n)en, unhaspen, unhillen, unlīnen, unmensken, unsteleken; even at that date the prefix is used with verbs which are not of native origin. Similar formations from later ME. are unbuckle, uncatch, unclench, uncover, unfetter, unkevel, unsew, unshut, unwrap, unyoke. The following are examples of obsolete ME. forms: — unhādien [OE. unhādian], to deprive of ecclesiastical orders; unmēnsken [f. MENSK v.], to dishonour; unrore [f. RONE v.], to make desolate; hence unro'ningness; unteōn [f. teon TEE v. 1 6 b], to fall apart.

b. In the 16th century new formations with un- become very numerous and varied, and in the 17th the prefix is used with much greater freedom than is now possible. The lexicographers Florio and Cotgrave constantly employ it in rendering Italian words in dis- and French words in de-. By this time the prefix had developed several variations of sense which are still current, and are illustrated by modern examples in the following sections.

3. In OE. most of the forms with un- have for their second part a simple verb, either strong (as unbindan, unfealdan, unlūcan, etc.) or weak (as uncnýtlan, undōn, ungyrdan, ungyrdan, etc.). In either case the prefix denotes a simple reversal of the action of the verb. Many of the new formations in ME. are of the same type, as unbend, unclench, uncover, unfasten, unhasp, unhide, unshut, etc., and additions to this class continue to be freely made at all subsequent periods. In addition to the numerous examples entered as main words, many others have been casually employed, similar to those here illustrated.

Florio and Cotgrave make extensive use of this type, e.g. unastony, unbrand, uncancel, unclunse, unclutter, uncompass, uncurd, unfester, unflow, etc. Ash gives unbaste, unmobile, unsolder, unsort, etc.

4. A small number of OE. verbs in un- imply removal or deprivation; these end in -ian, as unhddian to deprive of orders, unhldian to remove the lid from, uninsgeian to unseal, unscōgian to unshoe. In ME. the type remains rare, but occurs in unclead, unclothe, unhair. At a later date it becomes more frequent, and is common in modern use.

Florio is especially lavish in new formations which have not obtained subsequent currency, as unblossom, unbratn, unbridge, uncheek, uncheese, uncorn, uncorner, unflank, unfringe, ungarland, etc.

b. A modification of this sense is that of freeing or releasing from something. This appears in ME. in unfetter, unkevel, unyoke, although in origin these may be simply reversible. In the later period the type has also become common, and is very largely represented from the close of the 16th century.

Florio and Cotgrave afford numerous examples, as unbarb, unbit, unbunch, unchaff, uncrupper, ungravel, unhunger, etc.

5. The use of un- to denote the removal or extraction (forcibly or otherwise) of a person or thing from a place or receptacle occurs in the 14th cent. in unhouse, and later in unbody, unearth, but does not become prominent till the beginning of the 17th, when Florio and Cotgrave afford many examples. In a few instances the sense passes into that of releasing or setting free from confinement, as in uncage, or of revealing to others, as in unbosom.

Among the instances occurring in Florio and Cotgrave are unacrie, unbench, unborough, unbrake, unbranch, unchamber, unchest, unfurnace, etc.

1865 E. BURRITT Walk to Land's End 375 Then he "unbasked our dinner. 1897 Outing XLIX. 491/3 The request that a number of soldiers be sent back to "unbong the wagon. 1822 W. b. In some formations belonging to this type un- is prefixed to a word either denoting the thing removed or the action of removal; in the latter case the sense of the prefix passes into that of out. Examples of these uses are:—

1598 FLORIO, Shacciellare, ... to vngnaire, or take out of the coals. 1612 COTGR., Escerner, to vnkernell; to take or cut a thing cleane out of the round place wherein it was. 1877 TALMAGE Serm. 316 He it is who undirks the lightning from the storm cloud.

6. In OE. the fact or process of depriving a person or thing of a certain quality or property was not expressed by the reversible un-, but by verbal formations based on adjectives already having the negative prefix (see Un-1 14). Unable, appearing towards the end of the 14th cent., may still belong to this type, but from the middle of the 16th century forms become frequent in which the prefix is clearly the reversible un-, employed both with adjs. and sbs. Both types are largely represented in Florio, and to a less extent in Cotgrave. a. When the formation has an adjectival base, the adjective may be used in its simple form, or with the suffix -en.

Examples from Florio and Cotgr. of the simple adj. form are unbald, unbig, uncorrect, undizzy, ungidly, unhear, etc.; and of forms in -en, unfallen, ungracel, unmoisten, unlophen unthicken, unweaken.

1888 ROSKIN in Pall Mall G. 27 Oct. 5/2 Rosalind is extremely glad to get her face "unbrowned again. 1893 COLUMBUS (Ohio) Dispatch 19 Sept., They found... the shops ill-regulated and the Frenchmen "un-Frenched. 1827 HARR Guesses (1859) 488 You may abuse and misuse; you cannot "ungood. 1747 E. itself. 1826 SCOTT 19 Mar. in Croker Papers, If you *unscotch us you will find us damned mischievous Englishmen.

b. Substantives are similarly employed without ending.

Florio has a number of examples, as unbride, uncitizen, unconquard, undoctor, undwarf, etc. Casual formations are frequently employed by Fuller, as uncardinal, unchaplain, uncity, unmarry, etc.

1867 Sir J. V. SIMPSON in Duns Mem. xiv. (1873) 482 Often I wish I could *unbaronet myself. 1839 J. D. COLERIDGE in Life Ld. c. From sbs. (rarely from adjs.) there are numerous formations in -(r)fy*, and from both sbs. and adjs. in -ize. Other endings, as -ate, are less usual.

7. With rare exceptions, the OE. verbs in un- are transitive, and this has always remained the prevailing use. In ME., however, intransitive uses of some common words are found, as unbend, unclose, unlounk, and in casual formations as unbody. In the later language the usage increases to some extent (as in unfold, etc.), but is chiefly confined to words having some currency.

Florio employs unday, undebit, undroop, unsicken, unswell. The following are rare modern instances.

1816 COLMAN Br. Grins. Champervonne ii. His courtiers swore, 'They'd broil a pope to keep a place. So all unpapalized space. 1831 TELAWNY Adv. Younger Son II. 113 Look at him, he is unurbaning! 1862 HELPS Org. Daily Life 108 The organization grinds on... and it is very difficult to make the thing ungrind.

8. Verbal substantives, participial adjectives, and agent-nouns are naturally formed from verbs in un- as from simple verbs. These forms begin to appear in the 14th century, and become common in the later language.

Many of the past pples. and ppl. adjs., as unbent, unbound, undressed, unfastened, etc., coincide with formations in which the prefix is Un-, and the distinction in meaning is not always sufficiently clear to admit of an absolute separation between the forms. Either prefix is normally un-stressed in all participial formations used predicatively, but commonly receives the main stress when employed attributively, as an unbent bow, an unbound book.

9. The redundant use of un- is rare, but occurs in OE. unlesan, and ME. unloose, which has succeeded in maintaining itself. Later instances are unbare, unsolve, unstrip (16-17th cent.), and the modern dialect forms unempt(y), unrid, unthaw (also locally unweave).

For occasional misuses of un- see unloaden, unranked, Un, sb. An instance of the negative prefix Un-. 1850 B. DISCOLLIMINUM 7 It was a thousand points those two Un's were put in.

2. Of letters or writing: Having the large rounded forms (not joined to each other) characteristic of early Greek and Latin manuscripts; also (in looser use), of large size, capital.

The term is also applied to letters having the form of the uncial, irrespective of size. When used in its strict sense, uncial is distinguished from capital, which denotes the more original, unrounded forms of the letters.

Jerome's unciales litteræ (Prol. Job) is commonly explained as meaning 'letters of an inch long'; his use of the word is accompanied by the phrase ut vulgo aiunt, and the literal sense was perhaps not seriously intended. The emendations initialis 'initial' and uncinalis 'hooked, bent', have been suggested.

—uncle, suffix, representing OF. uncle (-uncle) and ultimately L. unculus, uncula, in a few words, in most of which it retains its diminutive force. New formations without Latin originals are rare, and the suffix has little independent existence though occasionally employed as in the following examples.

In OE. about eighty words with this prefix are recorded, but only fifteen or sixteen of these are of frequent occurrence. Of the total number about fifty are verbs, and twenty-five nouns, the adjectives being few and rare. In

OHG. there are also many examples both of verbs and nouns, in ON. of nouns only; on the other hand there are few recorded examples in OS., and none in Gothic.

2. In OE. (as in OHG.) a considerable number of the compounds with under- were clearly suggested by Latin forms with sub- (sub-, etc.), and occur only as renderings of these, e.g. underberan, supportare, sustinere; underbēd, subjectus; underbrēdan, -brēdan, subternere; undercerrende, subvertens; undercuman, subvenire. The frequency of such forms no doubt contributed greatly to establish the vogue of the prefix in ordinary use. The practice of rendering L. sub- by under- is extensively followed in the earlier Wycliffite version of the Bible, and gives rise to a large number of unique or unusual forms, as underburn, -cry, -drench, -follow, -grow, -heave, -hile, -join, -laugh, -lead, -minister, -now, etc., which are illustrated below, together with some others occurring in the anonymous translation of the Pauline Epistles. Similar examples are occasionally found in other ME. translated texts, as underorn, -slake (q.v.), after L. subornare, summitigare.

3. In combination both with verbs and with nouns various senses of the prefix were already developed in OE., and further variations have arisen in the later language, the starting-point for new developments being usually the Elizabethan period. In most of its senses under- can be freely employed to form new compounds, the meaning of which is obvious except when they are used in some special or technical connexion. In some of these general types under- is correlative to OVER-, and not infrequently the actual compound in under- is entirely due to the previous use of one in over-.

In the following sections a number of the more casual formations are given by way of illustration; those which have a more permanent character, or which for some reason require special treatment, are entered in their alphabetical places as main words. The uses which are most capable of giving rise to new formations, of which complete enumeration is impossible, are 4 a, 5, 6, 9, 10 a, b. Altogether the senses of the prefix may be classed under four heads:—

I. Denoting local position.

4. With verbs. The following variations are found in OE. and in the later language: a. Denoting action (or continuance of a state) carried on under or beneath something, as OE. underberan to support from below, underdelfen to dig beneath, underetan to eat away, to sap, underiarnan to run beneath, etc., ME. undercut, -dig, -grow, -hole, -mine, -pilch, -shore, -strew, and the later underbind, -brace, -build, -gird, -hew, etc. b. Denoting the action of moving so as to be or to get under something, as OE. underflowan to flow under, underhulan to descend beneath, undersclotan to pass under; ME. undercreep; also with causative force, as OE. underbrezdan to spread under, underdōn to put under, understingan, to thrust under, ME. underput, -set. Additions to this group are not frequent in the later language, but occur in undercrawl, -dive, -run, -work, and with slight variation of sense in underpeep, -peer. c. Rarely, the sense of 'from below' is found, as in underpeep, -shine.

In the dictionaries of Florio (1611) and Hexham (1647), under-is used in the above senses to form a number of compounds which are merely suggested by Italian forms in cog-, sop-, sotto- and Dutch in onder, as underbent, -knit, -loft, -mark, -note, -roof (Florio), undersame, -gripe, -lift, -press, -smoke (Hexham). In addition to verbs, the following miscellaneous examples include instances of the ppl. adj. and agent-noun.

d. A noun of action with under- may have the same form as the verb, as undercut, -gnaw, -hang, -lay, -lie, -lift, -mine, -run, -score, -spin, -thrust. 1895 J. J. RAVEN Hist. Suffolk 1 The coast line has suffered, and still suffers, from the constant undergnaw of the German Ocean.

5. With nouns: a. In names of garments worn under other articles of clothing, found in OE. underhwlitel, -syrc, but not common till the 16th century, when undercap, forebody, frock, -garment, -girdle, -sleeve occur. The following are examples of recent or less usual compounds.

Contrasted with OVER 8, and in modern use sometimes replaced by SUB-3.

Society* iii. 144, I should like to know how often the advocates of linen change their own *under-flannel.

b. Denoting that the thing specified is either placed below something else, or is the lower in position of two similar things; the two cases are only clearly distinguishable when it is usual for the things to go in pairs. The use is very rare in OE. and ME., but begins to extend in the 16th century and is common from the 17th. When pairs of things are contrasted, under- becomes equivalent to lower (as over- to upper), and readily assumes an adjectival function: see UNDER a. 1 b.

d. Denoting something which is either covered (completely or partially) by, or is subordinate to, something of the same kind. An early example of this is underwood (1325), followed later by undergrowth, -shrub (c. 1600). Other examples are mostly of recent date, and show considerable extension of the usage, as in underfleece, -fur, -marking, etc.

II. Denoting inferiority in rank or importance. 6. a. With designations of persons, esp. of subordinate officers or officials. This use occurs in OE. in undercrying, -diacon, -gerefa, -laddow, -þeow, becomes common in ME., and is extensively employed from the latter part of the 16th century. The meaning is however as frequently expressed by SUB- 5 a and 6.

b. With other nouns, in the sense of 'subordinate, subsidiary, minor'. An early instance of this is underhelp (1579); others, such as underaccident, -action, -cause, -ministry, etc., occur in the 17th cent. In later use the tendency is to employ either sub- (see SUB- 5 b, c, d) or an adjective, but A. TUCKER Light Nat. (1768) has under-aim, -plan, -scheme, -society, -species, -stage.

1598 FLORIO, Sottodistintione, an *under-distinction, or subdistinction. 1711 SWIFT Jnl. Stella 28 Apr. (1901) 203 All the *under-hints there are mine too. 1691 NORRIS *Pract. 7. With verbs, denoting reduction to (or acceptance of) an inferior or subordinate standing. Chiefly OE., as underblegan to subject, underbūgan to submit, underþēdan to subject, subjugate; and ME., as undercast, -put, -threw. See also under-shining, -sphere, -study, -sweat, -throw.

Under- is rarely employed in the sense of SUB- 9 (b); Florio (1611) has under-apoint rendering lt. sottodelegare.

III. In figurative senses.

8. With verbs. a. In OE., various secondary meanings of under- are represented by such verbs as under(beg)innan to begin or attempt, underfōn to receive, undergietan, -niman, -standan to understand, undersēcan to investigate. Several of these survive in ME., as underfo, undergete, -nim, -stand, underseche; and a few more are added, as underfind, -grobe, -take. In later examples the sense is usually that of (secret) investigation, as underfeel, -look, -search, -watch, or of unobserved action, as underhear. In addition to the verbs some agent-nouns occur, as under-dealer, -plotter, -puller.

Florio (1611) renders lt. sottosapere, -ridere by under-know, -smile.

b. From the end of the 16th cent. under- is used with verbs in the sense of 'below (= at a lower rate than) another person', as in underbid, -buy, -sell, -spend, -work.

c. Occasionally the sense is 'to a point or degree below what is normal or customary', as in under-cooled, -heru.

d. Very rarely, subordinate action is implied, as in underlet = snublet.

9. With nouns, denoting actions, etc., which lie or are kept beneath the surface or in the background. An early instance is undercraft (c. 1400); others occur from the 17th cent., as underdealing, -thought. Modern instances are chiefly of an individual character.

IV. Denoting insufficiency or defect.

10. a. With verbs. From the latter part of the 16th cent., by contrast with OVER- 27, under- is prefixed to verbs to imply that the action falls below the usual or proper standard, and thus acquires the sense of 'at too low a rate', 'too low', 'too little', 'insufficiently'. Early instances are underprize, -value, others of slightly later date are underbuy, -charge, -rate, -reckon, -sell, etc. Subsequently the use becomes extremely common, especially in the sense of 'insufficiently, not enough', and occurs frequently with pa. pples. and ppl. adjs. Examples of vbl. sbs. (cf. b) are also included in the following illustrations.

b. With nouns, in the sense of 'insufficient, deficient, defective', contrasted with OVER- 29. Examples occur in the 17th cent. in underprice, -rate, -value, -wages, and are not uncommon in later use, though less frequent than the verbal forms.

c. With adjectives under- is rarely employed as the opposite of OVER- 28, except when directly suggested by the latter, e.g. under-scrupulous as the converse of over-scrupulous; underhonest (Shaks.) in contrast to overproud; under-ripe, etc.

11. In words formed with under- the stress is variable. Normally it falls on the stem in verbs (including participles in predicative use) and on the prefix in nouns, adjectives, and attributive participles, with a secondary stress on prefix or stem respectively, whenever form or sense makes a double stressing natural or necessary. Even in verbs, however, the prefix naturally takes either the main or an equal stress whenever it becomes emphatic through contrast either with the simple verb or with a compound in OVER-.

12. Compounds in which the two parts are not felt to be distinct are written as one word without a hyphen. In other formations the use of the hyphen is variable, and depends to a great extent on the form or the frequency of the word. Complete separation of the prefix, common in older usage, is now restricted to instances in which under may be taken as an adjective. Examples of these have been included under the compounds, as no clear distinction can be drawn between the two.

Under- (vndə), prefix, originating in the coalescence of the preposition UNDER with a following noun, the compound being then usually employed as an adj. or adv., as UNDERFOOT, -GROUND, -HAND, -STAIRS, -WATER. In attributive use these compounds have the stress on the prefix.

Purely adjectival formations, as under-celestial (Florio), -natural (1642), -proficient (1703), are rare. An unusual type occurs in UNDERGRADUATE.
